3. INNOVATION ZONE AWARDS – JUDGING CRITERIA

Active ingredients

Marketing:

- What marketable claims are there for this material (e.g. in-vivo results)?
- How does this differ to what else is out there?
- How on trend are the key claims?
- How unique are the key claims? How novel/innovative are the key claims?
(Tip: As in-vitro results can't be marketed, this helps the chemist, but not the marketing person. It is therefore important for entries to provide translatable marketing claims, e.g. in-vivo)
- What consumer issue does the material solve, and how is that innovative to what else is on the market?
- How much in demand is the in-vivo result compared to what is already on the market?

Regulatory:

- What regulatory issues does this ingredient solve or what regulatory issues does this ingredient create?
- What extra regulatory issues need to be covered or considered with this innovation?

Formulating:

- What formulation issue does this ingredient solve?
- What formulation issue does it create?
- What about large scale manufacturing?
- How innovative is this material compared to what is already on the market (can consider in-vitro and in-vivo)
- What chemistry does it involve within the skin? Note: Green active solutions do tend to rank higher where they provide an innovative performance solution/alternative to a synthetic offering.

Functional Ingredients

Marketing:

- What innovative sensory aspect does this material offer e.g. skin feel, visual?
- How on trend is this sensory aspect?
- What commercially marketable aspect does this material offer e.g. green, sustainability, rural communities, etc?
- How on trend is that commercial aspect?

Regulatory:

- What regulatory issues does this ingredient solve?
- What regulatory issues does this ingredient create?
- How marketable are the claims from a regulatory perspective?
- What extra regulatory issues need to be covered or considered with this innovation?

Formulating:

- What innovative formulation aspect does this material offer e.g. multi-functional?
- Does it offer enhanced stability? Does it offer enhanced manufacturing?
- What formulation solution does it provide?
- How innovative is that formulation solution compared to what is already on the market?
- How much in demand is that formulation solution?

Note: Green active solutions do tend to rank higher where they provide an innovative performance solution/alternative to a synthetic offering
